Profile

A Japanese major student at Nantong University, working across photography, language learning, piano, and independent app development.

I often begin with everyday observations and turn them into visual records, written materials, and small digital products. My current work connects creative practice with thoughtful, usable app design.

App Projects

---

Echo

A lightweight productivity app focused on helping users restart tasks through quick capture, short attempts, and gentle reflection. It explores how a small app can reduce the friction between intention and action.

Kisp

A personal app project currently in development, focused on small everyday interactions and lightweight mobile tools. It is an experiment in turning simple needs into a clean and usable app experience.

Latent

A photography-oriented app for recording unfinished visual ideas, missed shots, and future shooting clues. It is designed as a personal map of photographic regrets, inspirations, and recurring visual patterns.
